GREAT MYSTERY OF ALCHEMY

“Combine opposites and you get what you’re looking for,” Maria’s eyes shone like two greenish stars in the sky of ancient Alexandria. In her hands she held a crystal sphere in which the light itself danced - now breaking up into particles, then merging into luminous shapes and symbols. She, Maria Profetissa, the first female alchemist, had just subjugated ancient magic and created a magical elixir from the primordial elements of nature.

She always knew that her calling was to serve people. Her incredible beauty is combined with a sharp mind, her own library numbers hundreds of books, and the great men of the ancient world, Aristotle and Aros, inspired by her fortitude, initiated her into the mysteries of alchemy.

Mary of Alexandria was the first woman to study the science of the nature of things, to know its essence and to turn her knowledge into pure gold. Her scientific inventions changed the material world, and her magical inventions healed the soul and body. She was able to combine the incongruous, to control earth, water, air and fire, to transform low matter into high. Her unique formulas, as well as her real name, have been lost to the ages, except the one... The one that started it all. The formulas of the Alchemix elixir, the primordial element of feminine magic.
