ARVANTA THE LEGEND ABOUT THE AMAZON

FABERLIC

TIME OF GREAT WARRIORS

In ancient times, the world was ruled by brave, famous Amazons who knew no defeat. Since childhood, skilled warriors shot accurately with a bow and masterfully wielded a sword. On the battlefield they had no equal, however, the basis of their greatness was not only passion and fearlessness, but also enchanting beauty: bewitched and admired by her, the men gave up without a fight.

The Amazons were ruled by the beautiful Antiope, who was called Arvanta. In the Scythian language it means “fast, brave” - a name worthy of a great queen. Led by Antiope, the Amazons won again and again. Only once they almost lost to the enemy, but miraculously avoided defeat: that day became truly legendary and forever remained in history!

The Amazons were so powerful that they managed to enter to Athens, the most impregnable city of the era - but the queen was captured. When Antiope was brought to the ruler of the city, the legendary Theseus, she only needed a few minutes so that he gave her his heart forever. The great warrior fell in love like a boy! Theseus also touched Antiope's heart. They fell in love with each other, and a truce reigned between the two great armies. Nobody didn't dare attack this union whose strength was given by love. This was the main victory of the queen, won without a fight.
