ORAL CARE

GEORGE AVAKIAN,
dentist; maxillofacial
and aesthetic
surgeon

Sodium fluoride is one of the main components of toothpastes to fight tooth decay.

It remineralizes enamel and protects it from "washing out" of mineral components, helps to reduce tooth sensitivity and inhibits the proliferation of cariogenic bacteria in the oral cavity.

Comparative studies have shown that when fluoridations are not used, tooth decay growth occurs faster.

The standard therapeutic concentration of fluoridations in adult toothpaste is 1400-1450 ppm, however, in conditions of shortage time for regular oral hygiene and predominance of high-carbohydrate foods is no longer enough.

Today, in addition to basic oral care it is recommended to use toothpastes with a concentration of fluoridones of 5000 ppm: they are effective not only for prevention, but also to fight tooth decay at the initial stage.

There is an endless sky all around,
hundreds of meters of emptiness below.
Heart is beating in a frenzied rhythm.
Take a deep breath. Your lungs are filling up with oxygen, and your body with energy. There is only you, a stream of fresh air and a breathtaking view.
One step and you'll never be
